“Lynn Penney has a real gift for creating sacred space and adeptly invites retreat participants to find their place within it. Her art-as-prayer meditations engage even the most artistically challenged to create lasting expressions that are holy and personal. A day with Lynn is good for your soul.”

Taking time to listen within.

Taking time to express ourselves.

Making art is one of the ways that I pray.

I have not always been an artist. I started making art in my mid-thirties when my father died. Through painting and other art making, I find that quiet center that is not just myself – it is also a place of God’s presence.

In Art & Prayer workshops, our focus is not on making “good art” – rather it is on creating something that speaks to what is sacred in our lives. Participants often find that making art can be a profound process of healing, prayer, and wholeness.

“As a participant in a number of Art and Prayer Workshops led by Lynn Penney, I heartily endorse her as a facilitator in the artistic process with people of diverse backgrounds. She leads with an open mind and heart, encouraging people to discover the artist within who emerges within this safe environment. Lynn brings her gifts of curiosity, faithfulness, artistic discovery and compassion to these sacred gatherings where people really do experience what it means to be still and to know God.”
